ARCTIC SWIMMERS

Donald B. MacMillan in his recently published book, "Four Years in the White North, writes with much interest of the pleasure he gained from the summers spent in the arctir regions," Another long, delightful arctic summer was here, he mays, "with its manifold opportunities for work, and work with distinct pleasure. Always the day was too short and the period of sleep too early. So much to do at a so little time in which to do it. What un high up on the cliffs, crawling and creeping on the narrow ledges, often with body pressed tightly against the face of the rock, hunting for the eggs of the white gyrfalcon, the raven and the big burgomaster sull. And what a swish of diving white bodies and extended wings as one approached nest and eggs and young: "Four Years in the White North," published by Harper & Bros, is a record of the Crocker Land expedition, which was headed by the author. In it he has blended important facis with details of unusual universal interest.

cision of the statesmen at Versallies to award Trentino and certain other territory furmerly under Austro-Hungarian domination to Italy means that the Italian-speaking race is at last to be united.

The Italy with which the younger generation of these times has been familiar is of comparatively recent growth. Only some fifty to sixty years ago matters were very different from what they are today, and at the beginning of the last century Italy presented the extraordinary picture of a number of separate states, "only a geographical expression," as it was contemptuously termed by Metternich, the archipriest of reaction in Europe during the early nineteenth century Italy was partly under foreign domination, partly under the rule of local dynasts who, with the exception of the House of Savoy, had no sympathy with ideas of poniar freedom or national unity.

The cutstanding feature of Italian history during the later middle age was the steady disappearance of civil freedom and the formation of despotically governed states, generally under foreign influence. ## HINDU CASTE BREAKS BEFORE MODERN LIFE

NEW YORK, May 21. (Spl.)—The age-old system in India by which a member of any one of the 1.584 castes composing any Hindu community must marry within his own caste promises to be broken up through the efforts of young Hindu radicals and Christian missionarjes. The latter have won the radicals over to their way of thinking and they have combined to urge the passage of the Hindu intercaste marriage bill recently introduced into the viceroy's council by the Hon. V. P. Patel. Word to this effect was today received at the headquarters of the Methodist Episcopal centanary movement from S. W. Clemes, of the Meerut conference, northern India. He writes that all of India is tremendously worked up over this issue.

Heretofore the Hindu law has prohibited marriage between the castes, a restriction which has directly fostered immorality and race deterioration. In a Brahmin community a man can not look outside his own caste for a wife, even though all the women be already married or though there are twice as many men as women. If he ignores the law his marriage is considered illegal. He is socially ostracized by law.

Christian leaders were the first to realize the evils of this cast-iron rule and have used their influence to bring about the change. Now the progressive wing of Hinduism is following democratic Christian leaders were the first to realize the evils of this cast-iron rule and have used their influence to bring about the change. Now the progressive wing of Hinduism is following democratic Christian leaders were the first to realize the respect of feetnown and mong the regressive hindu group, composed, of young university graduates. The orthodox Hindu. on the other hand, is firmly set against any change in the existing social order and bitterly opposes the proposed marriage bill. He regards the customs imposed by the caste system as ascred and immutable, and denies the right of a political body to alter them by legislation.

That reactionary Hinduism no longer analisties young India is shown by the report of Meth

The Quakers have so far raised all the money they have used, about half a million dollars, among their own number. They need $700,000 more, and are preparing for a new campaign.

"Are they grateful? I can not tell you how richly repaid we feel for all of our work by the simple and touching evidence of gratitude that we are encountering all the time."

The 550 workers are for the most part young college men and women from Quaker institutions, who have come to France to work without pay. Many of them are from farms and small towns. They are the most willing of workers and accept any sort of task cheerfully. They till the soil, set up houses, repair roofs of buildings that may still be used, drive ambulances, nurse the sick. Dr. Jones told me how they take their lives in their hands sometimes.

Aid Rendered Is Vital.

Of course our American Quakers can not do more than a small part of the work of reconstruction, but they are starting where their aid is most vitally needed, and everything they do counts. Dr. R. M. Jones, of Haverford college, Philadelphia, who is chairman of the service committee, told me about the work after completing a trip over the region where his people are employed. "We have undertaken to help the French people start life over again in the area west of Verdun to St. Menehould, and from Brizeaux to Montfaucan," he said. "This is the region from which the American army started at the outset of the Argonne campaign, and part of the ruin resulted from the fighting in the big offensive.

"Our first aim is to take care of returning refugees, who are offers sick, and who always need shelter. We have a big general hospital at Clermont, which we shall presently turn over to the French people, with a small endowment. We also have a materalty hospital at Chalons. Both hospitals are kept very busy. We have also a department devoted to the care of orphan children.

"As you have seen for yourself, the houses in Northern France have been shot to pleces. We have two fautories at work building portable houses, which we set up for the returning peasants. These houses are made of wood, double-boarded and double-floored, and have roofs of red tiles. They are inants. These houses are made of wood, double-boarded and double-floored, and have roofs of red tiles. They are intended for us as residences for two or three years, but they are good enough to be used much longer. The French government will supply 2,000 more portable houses, and in May our two factories will shut down, so that the workers may devote their time to setting up the houses.

"The French farmers will pay about 75 per cent of the cost of these new homes, on the partial payment plan, and as the money comes in we shall turn all of it into the endowment fund for the two hospitals.
